3. Agent Performance: [] has expressed his view of the agent's performance in Reference B. The present case officer will do so for himself in the next progress report which is to be written immediately after completion of this one. However, in summary it must be observed that [] has striven hard to broaden and develop further the exploitation of CARAVEL's considerable potential, particularly in the political reporting field both domestic and international. Although this concious effort has met with some success, it has as yet been anything but startling in the volume of production. Nevertheless, a good foundation has been established in that the necessary attitudes and frames of reference indispensable to such an additional mission have been slowly developed throughout the reporting period. It is anticipated that CARAVEL will therefore probably become increasingly productive in the future in this particular reporting field. The emphasis of production will, however, naturally continue to fall upon operational support and on information of an operational nature in view of the function of CARAVEL in the Federal Government and the nature of the normal access afforded him. The agent's performance during the reporting period has been of the same calibre as in the past, despite the seemingly ever increasing demands upon his strength, stamina and time which his official position is constantly placing upon him. He has performed most satisfactorily the objectives of the project as reiteratated in Reference A; and with the new emphasis it is expected that the future will provide an even greater fulfillment of those objectives.
